Table 1. Chronological list of the persons mentioned in Fol. 1r to Fol. 6v, numbered according to the order of mention with corresponding significant natural events or historical turning points.The timeline is given in BRB (Berber or Amazigh calendar) and standard BC/AD classification.

Note: (22) Theodoret of Cyrus / Thierry of Chartres, (27) Yoniton, fourth son of Noah, (28) Noah discussed in context of Pythagorean mathematics and angelic hierarchy, (29) Simeon bar Yochai, (30) Rabbi Eliazar ben Hurcanus / Eleazar of Worms, (32) Yohanan ben Zakkai, (33) Nehunyah ben HaKanah, (34) Isaac Israeli ben Solomon, (37) Saadia Gaon, (38) Abraham Bar Hiyya Savasorda, (39) Lisania, Jupiter I. (46) the Septuagint (LXX), the oldest Greek translation of the Hebrew Bible, commissioned by Ptolemy II Philadelphus (c. 309-246 BC). (64) The Timaeus, one of Plato's most influential dialogues about cosmology and the nature of the universe. During the Middle Ages, the Timaeus was the only work of Plato available in Latin translation, making it the primary source of Platonic philosophy. The work 'On the Nature of the World and the Soul' is a simplified summary of Plato's Timaeus by an anonymous author (Pseudo-Timaeus). (70) Hermes Trismegistos, a mythological figure formed from the syncretism of the Egyptian god 'Thoth' (Djehuty) and the Greek god 'Hermes' (Mercurius), though often identified with the biblical Enoch, who taught science and wisdom. Thoth's cult became established in the Old Kingdom (c. 2686–2160 BC) as he is frequently mentioned in the Pyramid Texts (c. 2400 BC). In the Middle and New Kingdoms (c. 2055–1077 BC) Pharaohs like Thutmose ('Born of Thoth') took his name and grand statues were commissioned by rulers such as Amenhotep III and Ramesses II. His worship continued during Ptolemaic and Roman Periods (323 BC – 4th c. AD) in this time, he was often syncretized with the Greek god 'Hermes'. (71) Pseudo-Dionysius the Areopagite, an anonymous Christian theologian and Neoplatonic philosopher / Dionysius the Areopagite, the first Bishop of Athens, (72) Saint Gregory the Great, Pope Gregory I. The angelic orders defined by Dionysius and Pope Gregory I are the foundational sources for the traditional Christian hierarchy of nine choirs. (74) Saint Isidore of Seville, often called the last scholar of the ancient world, connecting Greco-Roman traditions with Christian doctrine before the knowledge was lost to the Dark Ages.
